governmentality of unease*

Contemporary European nationalism distances itself from twentieth-century totalitarianism by adopting certain elements of support for gender equality within an otherwise xenophobic rhetoric. This alignment between gender issues and nationalism can also be found amongst certain strands of feminism, joined by, otherwise antinationalist, neoliberal advocates. In this presentation I will explore this peculiar encounter of anti-immigrant agendas and emancipatory rhetoric of women’s rights, and the political-economic logics underpinning this intersection.
